Confined Animal Feeding Operations (CAFOs) are operations that have or plan to have 1,000 animal units. These operations must obtain water quality protection permits, called Wisconsin Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (WPDES) permits, from the DNR. In order to help current and future WPDES permit holders and writers better understand and comply with permits, the DNR and its partners are holding a series of workshops and webcasts.

Who should attend these workshops?

• Currently Permitted and Expanding Livestock Owners and Managers
• Agricultural Engineers and Consultants
• Local Conservation Staff
• Crop Consultants
• All others who work with WPDES Permit Holders

The CAFO Workshops are face-to-face sessions that will be repeated in four locations around the state. Each workshop has two separate sessions, one designed for livestock operations that currently hold a WPDES permit and another designed for producers who do not yet have a permit but are interested in the permit process, timelines and requirements. There will also be some combined sessions that allow all attending producers to exchange information.

Paid registration for either workshop entitles participant to attend four additional webcasts to be held at 10 locations around the state. These webcasts will cover greater details on aspects of the WPDES permit program and local livestock siting permit requirements, such as submitting a complete permit application and plans for designed structures like manure storage.
